ME & MY OLD MAN

You know the role. You don't know the roads.

The job she turned down. The person she almost married. The year she nearly moved and didn't.

Here's the question that gets you there →

1

The job she turned down.

You know where she worked. You've never asked about the offer she said no to.

2

The person she almost married.

Not your dad. Someone else, once, for a while.

3

The year she nearly moved — and didn't.

And how different all of it would have been.

We ask chronological questions. A CV with feelings.

The ones that open the door are about choice, not sequence.

“What's the hardest decision you ever made that no one else knew about?”

Start here.

Then follow it.

“What would have happened if you'd gone the other way?”

“Who did you talk to about it?”

“Do you still think you got it right?”

Comment “ROADS” and I'll send you the full list.

Three follow-ups and you're somewhere you've never been in forty years of Sunday lunches.
