He’d already decided. He just didn’t know how to tell her.

Every practical question asked. Ready to book.

Here’s what I told him →

“I just don’t know how I’m going to tell her.”

Not because he thought she’d say no.

He was already rehearsing it going wrong.

It’s not about persuading them.

It’s about telling them the truth of why you want it.

“I’ve booked something.”

A plan, with no reason attached.

“I want to hear you tell it, in your own words, while I still can.”

The why.

ME & MY OLD MAN

The real reasons, and what to say back to the six things parents usually say.

Link’s in the comments.