

A friend asked me how to actually get his dad's story down.

He'd already started. Brought his mum in to help with the questions too.

1

Same time, same day, every week.

Make it boring and routine.

Boring is what makes people actually turn up.

2

Send the questions the day before.

Let him sit with them overnight instead of answering cold.

3

Don't overthink the shape of it before you start.

Just get the conversation happening.

You can sort the structure out afterwards.

4

Ask what he wants to say,
not just what you want to know.

It's his story. Let him tell it his way sometimes.

5

Why's it just your dad?!

Your mum's got seventy years of stories too.

He's done the hard part already.

Starting.

Most people never get past "I keep meaning to."

Save this for the first Sunday
you sit down to do it.

And if you're stuck, I'm here.
